Editorial Review

Review

"Tabloid newspapers thrive on the saucy, salacious secrets of celebs. But imagine if the tables suddenly turned and the staff were under the spotlight instead. As megastar actor Adam Jaymes rips in to the private lives of the team at The Daily Ear, you'll find yourself eagerly awaiting the exposes - and wondering whose next on his hit list. There are plenty of unsavoury characters to choose from but they're still quite likeable at the same time, which is down to the great writing. A fantastic debut from a former journalist." Jenny Green, The Sun "Paul Ilett's brand new book Expose whips and slams newsprint media with a savvy, electric and clever expose of the shady world of selling tomorrow's fish and chip paper. Brilliantly observed and devilishly demanding, Ilett's debut is a can't-put-it-down riot. A triumph for the first-time novelist." Jake Hook, TheGayUK "Set in the world of Britain's bestselling tabloid The Daily Ear, Expose is about a young actor who seems to have it all: Looks, fame and adoration. However, after building up a store of grudges against the Daily Ear he set about exposing secrets of the paper's staff. A timely tale of tabloid culture - sure to appeal to celebrity readers especially." Attitude Magazine
