Florentine By Emiko Davies

In Florentine, Emiko Davis takes us on a stroll through the streets of Florence, past bakeries and pastry shops bustling with espresso sippers, colourful markets, busy trattorias, butchers, hole-in-the-wall wine bars and late-night gelaterias.

She stays true to the most classic recipes and traditions of the Renaissance city – which inspired her to start her eponymous blog five years ago while living in Florence – revealing an unpretentious and unchanging cuisine that tells the unique story of its city, dish by dish.

'Emiko Davies' work is not a casual appreciation of Italian cooking – it is a studied, observant, and celebratory one. To see – and cook – Florence's food traditions through Emiko's recipes, research, and immersive photography is to gain a deeper understanding of the city that you're like to get in years of visits.'
– Kristen Miglore, Executive Editor, Food52

Editorial Review

Review

"Reading her cookbook on the cuisine of Florence, it's clear she is someone with an eye for detail who enjoys absorbing the story of a city. The capital of Tuscany is a place ripe for exploring food steeped in history. . . For anyone planning a trip to Florence, this cookbook will give you a great sense of what you'll find to eat." - Ileana Morales Valentine, Tampa Bay Times

About the Author

Emiko Davies is a food writer and columnist living in Tuscany. She first arrived in Florence with nothing but a suitcase and some broken Italian, but it soon stole her heart and inspired her to begin her now five-year-old blog www.emikodavies.com about Tuscan food, its history, and its almost strict adherence to traditions. She is considered an international authority on Florentine food, with a weekly column for Food52 called "Regional Italian Food", and a biweekly column for Italian newspaper Corriere della Sera, among other features. She is also an accomplished photographer and has had her images featured in Kinfolk and Maeve Magazine.
